COURSE MATERIALS
Required Textbook:

COURSE DESCRIPTION
This course is an introductory level survey of the major classic and contemporary theories and research in social psychology. One definition of social psychology is that it represents "an attempt to understand and explain how the thoughts, feelings, and behaviors of individuals are influenced by the actual, imagined, or implied presence of others" (Allport, 1985). Defined more broadly, social psychologists study social behavior (i.e., how individuals think of themselves and others, how they influence one another and how they relate to each other). Correlational and especially experimental studies are the means through which social psychologists learn about social behavior. Thus, you can expect much of the content of this course to concern research studies of social behavior.

The class meetings will consist of lectures, discussions, and demonstrations. The lectures basically will be coordinated with the reading assignments. The most important information for a given topic will be presented in lecture and/or the textbook. Therefore, both attending the lectures and keeping up on the reading assignments will be essential for adequate performance in the course.

ATTENDANCE
Students are expected to attend all regularly scheduled classes. More than two unexcused absences may result in the student being dropped from the class.

PREREQUISITE
Students must have completed Psychology 103 (Introduction to Psychological Science).

EVALUATION OF STUDENTS’ PERFORMANCE
Exams: Five exams will be given over the course of the semester. Each exam will include objective and/or essay questions. The exam questions will be based on material covered both in reading assignments and in lectures. Each exam will be worth 100 points.
Make-up Examinations: If you know that you are going to miss an exam, you must contact the instructor to make arrangements to take the exam before the scheduled time of the exam. If you miss an exam due to other reasons such as illness, you must deliver to the instructor a written medical excuse signed by a physician on official stationary. Only students who miss an exam and have excusable reasons that can be documented (e.g., a doctor's official stationary) will be allowed to take an alternative version of the exam (of equal length and difficulty to the regularly scheduled exam).

Written Papers: You will write one paper for this course on a topic that you select from the list below. You will choose a topic from the list and then access and copy three (3) research articles from peer-reviewed journals, related to your topic and published since 2003. Each article must have a Method section, a Participants/Subjects section, and a Results section. You will read the articles and write a paper based on what you have read. Articles not of a social psychological nature are not acceptable.

Within your paper you are to first define the topic or phenomenon you have chosen. Additionally, you will provide a clear representation of the problem(s) investigated, the hypothesis/hypotheses tested, the characteristics of the sample(s), the method(s) of data collection, a clear representation of the results and a clear representation/explanation of your thoughts about the results and the article. The above should be completed separately for each article.

Your paper will be worth a maximum of 100 points. Well-written and informative papers will be given a score of 90-100. Papers that are very good, according to the criteria just listed, will be given a score of 80-89. Satisfactory papers will be given a score of 70-79, papers that leave quite a bit to be desired will be given a score of 60-69, and unsatisfactory papers will be given a score of 59 or less. Any evidence of plagiarism will result in zero credit for the assignment.

The paper assignment is being used in this course for three significant reasons. First, it will provide students with practice at academic writing. Second, it also will provide an opportunity for students to read more in depth about a topic of their interest. Finally, the thought and effort required for completion of the paper will help students better learn, understand, and appreciate the applicability of topics covered in the course. The due date for the paper is March 26th. Papers will be turned in at the beginning of class on the due date. Late papers will not be accepted and the student will earn zero credit for the assignment.

In the case of an excused absence that is unanticipated (e.g., sudden, extreme illness), the instructor will determine the time and day that the work must be completed. In all cases of excused absences that are planned (e.g., college sponsored trips), assignments must be turned in prior to the absence.
